The Tudors in Review

by Dame Elizabeth Alles

As you enter The Tudors: Art and Majesty in Renaissance England [a traveling exhibit currently at the Cleveland Museum of Art], your eyes are almost immediately drawn to a cope, one of a group commissioned by King Henry VII for Westminster Abbey. It is an appropriate beginning, demonstrating the first Tudor monarch's obsession with securing his throne and legacy by rendering Lancastrian roses, white Yorkist roses, and Henry's Beaufort family symbol of a portcullis in velvet cloth of gold brocaded with silver. It sets the stage, as Henry VII's consolidation of royal power did, for the English Renaissance that unfolded during the 16th century.

The exhibit emphasizes how the Tudor monarchs used art to project an image of themselves as powerful royals ordained by God himself to rule. The portraits include the larger-than-life Hans Holbein depiction of Henry VIII posed in all his manly swagger, Edward VI as a toddler prince already draped in the finery of an heir apparent, and Elizabeth I holding a sieve to represent her virginity and sole devotion to her role as Queen.

The "rainbow" portrait of Elizabeth I - her left hand holds a rainbow. Zoom in to see eyes and ears embroidered on the overskirt. 1602.

Likewise, objects like the 1563 letters patent from Edward VI to William Paget and the 1578-79 New Year's gift roll of Elizabeth I speak to the Tudors' use of patronage to reinforce their status as rulers. The diverse origins of the artists – German, Flemish, French, and others – merged at the Tudor Court to create a distinctly English Renaissance style. Every object in the exhibit tells its own part of the story, and it would take hours to describe them all. It ends, appropriately, with the famous Rainbow Portrait of Elizabeth I, rife with symbolism and painted very near the end of her reign. Elizabeth I holds a rainbow, a symbol of the relative peace that England enjoyed, and she stands as the bright beautiful sun that makes the rainbow possible.

The Tudors: Art and Majesty in Renaissance England is in Cleveland 2/26/23-5/14/23, following its debut at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. After Cleveland, the exhibit will continue to its 3rd and final stop at the Fine Arts Museum of San Francisco 6/24/23-9/24/23. The Met and the CMA organized the exhibit in collaboration with the Fine Arts Museum.

5 Questions for Cleftlanders - Countess Serena Kimbalwyke (mka Sheri Israel)

1.) What group/Kingdom did you start the SCA in?

Cleftlands, Middle Kingdom

2.) What are your two main activities in the SCA?

Rearing silkworms and processing silk from their cocoons.

3.) Recently, you have been championing something called "Crafters' Green" - could you tell us what that is and who can participate?

The Crafters Green is a predefined area at events where any artisan of any skill level may set up a workspace in order for them to work on their period projects. This is NOT your typical A&S display! Artisans will be encouraged to stay with their projects and actively work on them during the event. The idea is for artisans to demonstrate period techniques, discuss their methods, and give informal instruction if asked about their craft. General populace at the event will be invited to visit and spend time watching and learning from the artisans. There are no requirements for documentation, type of project (except where limited by site restrictions such as alcohol, food, or other activities that cannot be accommodated by the site) or length of time. More info can be found here: <https://tinyurl.com/Craftpersons-Green-Info>

4.) You are known for your work with silk and silkworms - what's one interesting thing about silkworms or working with silk that people may not know?

In medieval times, people thought that the silk moths chewed their way out of their cocoons. Actually, the moths don't have working mouth parts so they could not chew through anything. They have a gland on the top of their heads that secretes an enzyme that softens and dissolves the glue (called sericin) that holds the cocoon together. Once the sericin has been dissolved the silk moth can push itself out of the cocoon.

5.) What is your favorite Pennsic memory?

When I was Princess, I was fighting in my first Pennsic field battle ever in rapier combat. Nikolai was at resurrection point and he saw me heading towards him, so he waited for me and we went back to the battle together. A hold was called before we made it to the fighting, so we dropped to our knees to take a quick break. In that moment we were all alone. Nikolai looked at me and said "So, how are you doing?" I looked at him and burst into tears, saying "All these years that you've been fighting field battles here and I didn't really get it, but I GET IT NOW! This is amazing!" He replied "Oh honey, don't cry, there's still fighting to do!" The memory is so strong that I'm tearing up just writing this! Draco Invictus!

Random Period Object - Cleveland Museum of Art

Elizabethan Coif; England, Late 1500s.

<https://www.clevelandart.org/art/1934.206>

Size: About 8.25 x 16.5 inches

Silk, padding, linen, embroidered with gold and silver thread and sequins.

This richly decorated coif would have been worn with a forehead cloth by a wealthy lady in the house or bed when they were being somewhat informal but still receiving guests. It pointed backward, with the loops at the bottom to be used to draw the fabric together to keep the coif in place. It was meant to prevent wrinkles by keeping off the sun or cold air.

While the owner is unknown, the items depicted represented England, with the Tudor rose having prominence. Also featured are carnations, honeysuckle, and acorns. Such symbols of loyalty were popular in the Elizabethan era.
